SLIME MOLD MAY APPEAR IN LAWNS

Frequent showers in spring and early summer may prompt the appearance of "slime mold"—an unpleasant but not serious lawn disease.

Plant pathologists at Virginia Polytechnic Institute say the symptoms of the disease are white splotches, sometimes only 4 to 8 inches in diameter, on a part of the lawn, giving the appearance of white paint spattered around. Later the splotches may turn a dark brown in color. When slime mold is disturbed, dark smutty - appearing spores shoot out in the air.

Control measures for slime mold are not warranted because the disease will disappear when normal weather comes.
